

24 April 1984

NOTE FOR: John

SUBJECT: Terrorism Conference on 17 May 1984

25X1

I spoke to this morning about getting a request for funds which Gates approved for the conference. She is going to put a form for us to complete in the mail.

I have called the Hudson Institute and spoke to Judith Jacono's assistant about reserving space for you, which she has done. She said that if we could not get a check in the mail on time to bring the money to the conference.

TERRORISM AND LOW ORDER WARFARE:

Future Threats and Implications for Defense Policy and Force Structure

Recent events in the Third World highlight the serious consequences of terrorism and "low-order" warfare for U.S. policy and personnel. Although U.S. national security policy is directed primarily toward meeting the political and military threat posed by the Soviet Union, terrorism and "low-order" warfare threaten important U.S. interests—including substantial operations of American corporations—in crisis-prone regions of the Third World.

What insights can be provided to national security professionals and corporate planning decision-makers about these threats? What is the evolution of U.S. military doctrine, force structure and weapons systems in coping with these threats?

Hudson Institute is a private, non-profit organization devoted to research on policy and planning issues for business and government. Since its founding in 1961 by Herman Kahn, Hudson Institute has provided government and business leaders with independent policy research on major national and global issues. The Institute is also recognized as a pioneer in the field of future studies--the projections of emerging trends and problems to aid present-day decision-making
